

HEAVY FIGHTING ALONG THE WEST FRONT YESTERDAY

Hostile Capitals Each Claim Series of Victories In General Battling

GAS TACTICS ARE FAILURES

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)

LONDON, October 10.—In the Champagne and north of Arras another series of battles is in progress, with directly contradictory reports of the outcome from Paris, Berlin and British headquarters in France.

Paris announces that with poison gas, flame projectors, asphyxiating bombs and other German inventions for trench fighting, the Teutons have endeavored to regain some of the positions taken from them, in each case being repulsed, while both the British and the French have advanced against the retreating Germans, adding fresh gains to those of the past week.

Violent Artillery Duels

Along the entire Artois front there have been artillery battles, these being the most violent before Tulle, in the Champagne. The French are not only maintaining their positions here but have silenced some of the German batteries and strengthened their hold on the important Tulle crest.

Southeast of Neuville and at St. Vast, north of Arras, the Germans charged under cover of a gas cloud, which failed to shake the French defense, however, and the attack was repulsed.

British Gain Trenches

Official reports from Sir John French announce that the Germans have lost heavily in the offensive attempted by them against the new British trenches south of Labassee canal. Here also gas was used without effect, the British charging through the gas fumes and gaining fresh trenches. The British advance in some places was a thousand yards, while in no place along the new front were the gains less than five hundred yards.

The Germans had no opportunity to rescue their wounded and the ground over which the British advanced was covered with German bodies. The main British gains are northeast of Loos, between Hill Seventy and Hulloch.

Berlin Contradicts

In direct contradiction to these reports are those from official German sources, which state that the British attempts to advance southwest of Loos resulted in German gains of ground, which the British were repulsed with heavy losses northeast of Vermelles, in the Labassee canal region. In the Champagne, says the Berlin report, the French invaded the German lines east of Navarin at certain places, but were later driven out, leaving prisoners in German hands.

In the bitter contest for possession of the hill south of Leintrey, the French were finally defeated.

GERMAN TRANSPORT SUNK BY BRITISH

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)
LONDON, October 9.—It was officially announced in Petrograd today that a German transport in the Baltic has been sunk by a British submarine. Two British steamers, the Silver Ash and the Seaway, have been sunk in the Channel. It is presumed that the sinking was done by German submarines though there have been no definite statements by the officers yet.

INVADING SERBIA IN FULL FORCE

Allies Also Rushing Army Into Balkans, While Greece Makes No Move

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)
LONDON, October 10.—A pronounced Austro-German drive is now well under way into Serbia, across the Save and the Danube, with the Serbian frontier forces falling back before the Teutonic advance, fighting rear guard actions but attempting to make no stand.

At the same time, across Greece, an Anglo-French force is being rushed to the defense of Serbia. The Allies are leading men at Salonika at the rate of fourteen thousand a day, and these are being pushed north as rapidly as the railroads can take them.

Where Battle Will Come

It is anticipated that the first real test of the strength of the Austro-German invasion of Serbia will come when their forces meet the main Serbian army in the mountain "positions" against which the former Austrian drive smashed itself and was beaten back with heavy losses. The Serbians have been strengthening these defenses for the past three months and announce that they are impregnable.

The formidable nature of the German movement is recognized, however, and the Allies will pour a huge force into the Balkans to meet it.

Turkey Helps Bulgars

In the meanwhile, Turkey is concentrating a force of fifty thousand men at Dedegatch, Bulgaria, on the Aegean, west of the Gulf of Enos, and is sending other troops to Varna, the Bulgarian Black Sea port. Indications that Bulgaria intends to make a strong diplomatic point of the landing of soldiers of the Allies on Greek soil while Greece was ostensibly maintaining neutrality were heightened today when Bulgaria, through the ambassador at Athens, formally lodged vigorous representations with the Greek government. Bulgaria declared that the landing of Anglo-French troops at Salonika and their march inland have upset the Balkan status quo and imperiled friendly relations between Greece and her neighbors.

GERMAN DEFENSE OF SYRIAN HORRORS FROM REVENTLOW

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)
BERLIN, October 10.—Von Reventlow, in a signed article in the Berliner Zeitung yesterday, replies to the appeal made by Viscount James Bryce to America to take action to end the alleged Armenian atrocities, and answers the American criticisms of Germany for not bringing pressure to bear upon the Porte to modify its attitude towards the Christian residents of Syria.

Von Reventlow states that the matter of the Armenian uprisings against Turkey and the Turkish methods of suppression are affairs that concern Turkey alone. The precautionary measures being taken by Turkey to stop any repetition of the uprisings of the past are neither unnecessary nor are they to be truthfully described as atrocious. "We, Germans," he says, in relation to the suggestions from the United States and England that Germany should intervene for the protection of the Armenians or be held as sharing in the alleged atrocities, "do not have to render any account either to our enemies nor to the neutral nations over the Turkish methods of handling the Armenian question. Our sole duty at the present time is to be at the side of our ally."

Pound Ball All Over Lot While Opponents Starve For Hits, But Glaring Errors On Bases Lose Much For Hub City Players

Prospects for clear weather for today's game are exceedingly bright. At midnight at Philadelphia, the sky was cloudless and the weather man has forecast fair and cool weather for today.

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)
PHILADELPHIA, October 9.—The Philadelphia baseball team of the National League won the opening game of the series for the world's championship over the Boston Americans here yesterday afternoon, the score being three to one. The game as seen through the eyes of the experts was as poor an exhibition of the game as ever staged in Philadelphia, and the victory of the National League representatives was a most unimpressive one.

Grover Cleveland Alexander, the much heralded marvel of the diamond, displayed a wonderful lack of nerve in the early stages of the game. Luck, though, favored the Philadelphia man and every needed break of the game was in his favor.

Boston Superior At Bat
Of the two teams, Boston showed a vast superiority at the bat and all of their hits were hard driven and screaming liners to the outfield, but their poor work on the bases on more than one occasion and inability to follow up advantages, proved their undoing.

Several times glaring errors of omission on the part of the Boston players caused their supporters to gasp with wonder and on more than one occasion groans and cat calls greeted the players as they came off the field to their bench. In the parlance of the slangster, the Red Sox gave many indications of ivory headedness.

One "Bonehead" Play

One play in particular in the opening of the game brought disaster to the Boston team and caused its supporters to wonder what had come over the great machine. Harry Hooper, lead off man, had worked his way around to third base with two outs and a hitless second base, and Fred Snodgrass, who dropped a fly at Boston in 1912 and gave the world's series to the Beantown aggregation. Philadelphia took advantage of the situation and before the inning ended sent two runners to the plate. Boston made a last desperate stand in its half of the ninth, but failed and the first game of the world's series went to Philadelphia.

Crowd Comes Early

The crowd was like that which gathered at any championship baseball game only it did not come in size to some of the gatherings which have taken in world's series games in other cities. This was due to the fact that the Philadelphia National League park could not accommodate a third of those who wanted to witness the struggle. At that it was an immense gathering of the faithful, the turnstiles showing an attendance of 19,343 or 1219 less than the crowd that attended the Athletics' and Braves' opening game a year ago. The gate receipts, though, were greater, being $51,066 as against $49,629 in 1914.

Boon To Peddlers

As the dawn broke, the scene around the ball park yesterday was an animated one. Long lines of ticket purchasers who had braved the rain and waited all night long for the opportunity to watch the two teams in action, gave a sigh of relief as the sun peeped through the clouds and they knew their waiting had not been in vain. And these lines proved a boon to the vendors of frankfurters, sandwiches and coffee. They reaped a golden harvest, the demand for something to eat and the steaming beverage being greater than the supply.

As the weather cleared and the gates were opened the stampede for the bleachers began and as the two captains, Luderus for Philadelphia, and Barry for Boston, went into consultation with the umpires over the rules, a mob of nearly 20,000 glued their eyes on the group and patiently awaited the cry of "Play Ball."

Great Catch By Paskert

Into the crowd tore Paskert and just as the ball was about to hit the fielder made a headlong dive and caught the ball. It brought the stands to their feet and as Paskert walked

War Loan a Neutral Business Proposition, Explains Morgan

Financier Scouts As Ridiculous the Fear of Panics To Follow Flotation

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)
NEW YORK, October 9.—J. Pierpont Morgan, in an address yesterday to the representatives of the bond firms through whom subscriptions to the half billion dollar war loan of the United States have been made, declared that the opposition to the flotation which had developed among certain influential Americans was based on a misconception. That the flotation of the loan would tend to create panics, as had been stated, or would so interest American financiers in the outcome of the war as to affect the strict neutrality of the nation, were absurdities, he declared.

Deadly Typhus Appears In Victoria and Many Die

Hawaii In No Danger, Says Head of Federal Quarantine Here—Disease Easy to Quell

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)
LONDON, October 9.—A Reuters' despatch from Melbourne, Australia, says an epidemic of typhus fever has broken out in the state of Victoria. Four hundred and forty seven cases of the malignant disease have been reported and of these, the despatch says, a hundred and thirty-four already have proven fatal.

HAWAII IS IN NO DANGER OF DISEASE

Doubt was expressed here yesterday whether the situation in Australia is as serious as the despatch indicates. But even if it is found true in every respect the situation is unlikely to effect Honolulu or the traffic passing through this port from the colonies to Canada and the States.

Typhus is the dreaded scourge which a few months ago was sweeping through the war ridden districts of Serbia, but which, recent despatches report, has been checked and materially subdued. Once fully started its devastation is more terrible than that of war.

No Official Warning

Dr. F. E. Trotter, chief federal quarantine officer at the port of Honolulu said yesterday evening that he had received no word concerning the outbreak in the English colonies. From the Surgeon General at Washington, said for that reason was inclined to be skeptical as to the gravity of the condition in Victoria.

"We are informed immediately by the Surgeon General of every such outbreak anywhere in the world," said into the Philadelphia players' dugout he was given a warm reception by his team mates.

Then came the beginning of the end and the tossing away of the game by Infielder Scott, who will have to take his place along with Fred Merkle, who lost a championship because he did not touch second base, and Fred Snodgrass, who dropped a fly at Boston in 1912 and gave the world's series to the Beantown aggregation.

Philadelphia took advantage of the situation and before the inning ended sent two runners to the plate. Boston made a last desperate stand in its half of the ninth, but failed and the first game of the world's series went to Philadelphia.

Despite the shining of the sun the day was a cold and blustery one; still it did not dampen the enthusiasm of the crowd within the enclosure nor did it keep thousands from crowding the house tops and other points of vantage from which a glimpse could be had of the game.

Foster Won His Own Game By Much Desired Hit In Ninth— Both Teams In True Championship Form For the Contest

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)
PHILADELPHIA, October 10.—Boston came back into its own here yesterday afternoon and, in a game vastly different from the disappointing one of Thursday, outbatted, outfielded and outgeneraled the National League team and won by a two to one score.

It was a great victory for the American League champions and the listless and shiftless game of the Red Sox in the opening battle for the great classic has already been forgiven and forgotten. The tale of the mediocre playing of the first day has been wiped off the slate and today Boston is proclaiming Bill Carrigan, George Foster, Duffy Lewis and the others of the Hub City diamond stars as favorite sons. This has come about through the wonderful reversal of form displayed by the Red Sox in the second game of the series. With George Foster pitching as he pitched in the strenuous days of the pennant race, the team showed itself a great baseball combination and handily turned the tables on the Philadelphia Nationals, making the count one game each in the championship struggle.

It was a battle royal between the stars in the Philadelphia line up and those of Boston, and when George Foster singled sharply to centerfield in the ninth inning and sent Larry Gardner over the plate with the run that eventually won the game, even Philadelphia's supporters cheered for the victors.

Commands Situation

The big right hander, in whom Boston placed its trust, pitched after the fashion that has made him the most feared of all American League boxmen. The mighty machine of Philadelphia, with its hard hitting Luderus, Gardner, George Paskert, and Frank Bancroft, was at his mercy, and to cap the climax, it was his drive that brought victory to Boston and made the series so far an even proposition.

For the Phillies, Erskine Mayer pitched a brilliant game, but at critical moments wavered and the Red Sox took advantage of these irregularities. Behind Mayer the Phillies fought every inch of the way and his support was without a damaging flaw, but the Boston stars were too strong for the big man from Georgia.

A greater crowd than on the opening day witnessed the contest, the official figures showing 20,306 paid admissions and a total gate receipts of $52,029.

It was the usual baseball crowd. Philadelphia's supporters were out in full force, with their thousand and one noise producing instruments including a full brass band. Boston too was noisily represented with flaming red and white megaphones, pennants and also a full brass band.

President Is There
Among the notables in the boxes were President Wilson and his fiancée, Mrs. Galt and as the President advanced to his seat he and his fiancée were given a great ovation. His seat was near the Boston players' bench and Manager Carrigan and his team took this as a good omen.

Later on the game the two teams lined up for the game. Mayer taking his place in the pitchers box and Harry Hooper stepping to the plate, it was the President who threw out the new white ball. As he stood on the pitcher's mound, the crowd again broke into cheers and both bands blared forth the Star Spangled Banner.

As the Philadelphia pitcher received the ball, it was plain to be seen that he felt Alexander in the dugout was nervous and before he could set himself for the great task before him Boston had worked through his defense and had scored runs in the first and second innings.

Elsewhere than at Dyvinsk the Russians are pushing the fighting and gaining a number of minor successes. It is believed here that the German plan now is to concentrate on both wings of the eastern line, secure the Dyvinsk River front, drive back the Russian left across the Bessarabian frontier and then prepare their winter positions all on Russian soil.

RECOGNITION FOR CARRANZA HAS BEEN AGREED BY PAN-AMERICANS

Villa, As Last Chance, Suggests Coalition — Says He Will Fight Carranza To Last

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)
WASHINGTON, October 10.—The official representative of the six leading South American Republics, members of the Pan-American Conference on the Mexican situation, yesterday reached an agreement that they would each recommend to their respective governments the formal recognition, in cooperation with the United States, of "First Chief" Carranza as the de facto President of Mexico and the Carranza party as the de facto government of the revolution ridden Republic.

Those present at the conference were the ambassadors of Argentina, Brazil and Chile and the ministers of Guatemala, Ecuador and Peru, with Secretary of State Lansing presiding. The deliberations were in secret, but the announcement of the decision to recommend the recognition of Carranza was made immediately after the conference broke up. That such would be the course had been generally agreed upon beforehand.

Embargo Against Villa

This means that the Carranza government will receive the moral support of the United States and that, while Carranza may import arms and munitions, a strict embargo will be placed against the exportation of war supplies to any of the enemies of the Carranza administration. This embargo, assured through the fact that the recognition of Carranza means the classification of the enemies as revolutionists, will be imposed as soon as the formal recognition is extended, probably within the next two weeks.

It is believed that Carranza will adopt a liberal attitude towards his opponents and those aligned with Villa and Zapata, inasmuch as the recognition is based mainly on the guarantee he has proffered of full protection to all foreigners and amnesty and justice to those who have been in the field against him.

Will Settle All Claims

The Carranza government is also assuming responsibility for the settlement of all claims filed against Mexico as a result of losses to foreigners through the various revolutions, such claims to be adjusted by international commissions.

The First Chief likewise pledges himself to prevent all persecutions because of religious beliefs, while the nuns and priests of the Roman Catholic Church will be permitted to return to Mexico.

VILLA SAYS HE WILL FIGHT TO A FINISH

EL PASO, Texas, October 9.—Government created by a coalition cabinet composed of all representatives of all the Mexican factions which have played any important part in the affairs of the Republic for some years past has been proposed by Gen. Francisco Villa as an alternative plan to recognition of General Carranza at this time. General Villa says that recognition of Carranza will produce peace in Mexico as he and his adherents will fight such a plan to the finish.

INVADING FLEET OFF— NEW ENGLAND WINS

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)
WASHINGTON, October 9.—As the climax to a big and stirring naval war game played by U. S. vessels off the eastern coast, Admiral Frank Fletcher's "Blue" fleet, which for a week has been defending the coast, has been defeated by the attacking "Red" fleet under Admiral Austin Knight. Secretary Daniels today announced the result of the maneuvers.

The attacking fleet forced the entrance to Delaware Bay last night. They had until October 15 to accomplish this under the terms of the problem given the admirals.
